The imposition of President's Rule, once a frequent and politically motivated tool of the Centre, has declined considerably since the 1990s. This welcome shift is a consequence of S.R. Bommai, the landmark judgment, the rising influence of regional parties in national politics, and public revulsion to its misuse. In recent years, its application has become rare, reserved for genuine constitutional breakdown or severe internal security challenges, such as in Manipur On Friday, President's Rule was extended there by another six months, from August 13. But few would contest the extension, as the Centre is struggling to find a durable solution to the ethnic conflict Following the resignation of N. Biren Singh and the fall of the BJP government, there has been a discernible but fragile calm. A crackdown on militant groups that had operated with impunity has reduced open violence, and some families displaced since May 2023 have begun to return home. However, these positive developments are overshadowed by the unbridged and deep-seated ethnic schism between the Kuki-Zo and Meitei communities. The landscape of Manipur is still carved up by buffer zones, rigidly segregating communities. The political chasm is just as stark: Kuki-Zo groups are resolute in their demand for a separate administration, while hardline Meitei organisations persist with a narrative that brands fellow citizens as "outsiders".

Administrative steps, particularly those that reiterate de-weaponisation and a defanging of militant groups acting for ethnic interests, must continue. They not only break the aura of impunity with which these groups function but will also encourage moderates to raise their voices for reconciliation. During Mr. Singh's tenure, prominent civil society activists seeking to halt the conflict by critiquing the biased nature of governance were hounded. But the administrative measures to improve the rule of law must be supplemented by political gestures. The BJP enjoyed support in the valley and the hills when it was elected, but has been unable to bridge the ethnic hostility. This is largely because the party's national leadership has shown little inclination to treat the issue urgently, leaving it to civil servants and security forces to tackle the problem. While the continuation of President's Rule might seem inevitable in Manipur, its success should not be measured by the absence of violence alone. The Centre's responsibility is to foster political conditions to bridge the ethnic divide, but that responsibility must be shared. Political parties and civil society groups must defy the hardliners and begin the painstaking work of reconciliation. The future of a peaceful Manipur will be written by the initiative of committed political actors willing to transcend ethnic divisions and work toward the genuine healing of their fractured society.

Pattern 1: Inference Based Question

What can be reasonably inferred about the role of the judiciary from the passage?

- A) The judiciary has always opposed the imposition of President's Rule.
- B) The S.R. Bommai judgment curtailed arbitrary central power through legal precedent.
- C) The judiciary recently intervened in the Manipur crisis.
- D) Judicial oversight has led to the enforcement of separate administrations.
- E) The judiciary influenced the electoral success of regional parties

Pattern 2: Central Argument Based Question

What is the central argument of the passage?

- A) President's Rule is no longer misused and is now a necessary constitutional measure.
- B) The ethnic conflict in Manipur can only be solved through military action.
- C) Political and administrative efforts must work together to heal Manipur's ethnic divides.
- D) The BJP has failed to secure electoral support in Manipur's hilly regions.
- E) Civil servants and security forces must take full charge of reconciliation in Manipur.

Pattern 3: Vocabulary Based

In the context of the sentence, "...a crackdown on militant groups that had operated with impunity has reduced open violence...", which of the following best conveys the implied meaning of "impunity"?

- A) Legal authorization
- B) Boldness stemming from immunity from consequences
- C) Courage under existential threat
- D) Covert support from state actors
- E) Political legitimacy granted through consensus

Pattern 4: Critical Reasoning

Which of the following best captures the author's criticism of the Centre's approach in Manipur?

- A) The Centre failed to militarize the region in time, allowing insurgency to surge.
- B) The Centre's over-reliance on civil society escalated the ethnic schism.
- C) The Centre ignored civil servants and relied on party workers instead.
- D) The Centre imposed arbitrary rules without constitutional backing.
- E) The Centre's delayed political engagement allowed the conflict to stagnate. /

Pattern 5: Sentence Completion

The success of President's Rule in Manipur, as per the author, should not be gauged merely by the cessation of violence, but by _____.

- A) the restoration of pre-conflict electoral patterns and federal harmony
- B) the visible reduction of insurgent presence across valley and hill districts
- C) the measurable outcomes in reconciliation, cross-community dialogue, and administrative integration /
- D) the reinstatement of the BJP-led political order and law enforcement efficiency
- E) the emergence of a regional political alliance acceptable to both ethnic groups

Pattern6: Tone Based

What is the most accurate characterization of the author's tone throughout the passage?

- A) Empathetic but accusatory toward the ethnic groups
- B) Detached and purely factual in its assessment
- C) Sharply critical of federalism as a constitutional model
- D) Concerned and analytically critical of administrative inertia
- E) Optimistically supportive of the Centre's intervention

TH THE HINDU EDITORIAL ANALYSIS | ANUBHAV SIR | 8 AM | 🔼 The India-United Kingdom Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement (CETA), signed by the two countries on Thursday, is a good example of the give and take between two large economies of comparable size. While the U.K. has agreed to provide India duty-free access to about 99% of its tariff lines, it has been more conservative when it comes to the movement of professionals. It has set an annual quota of just 1,800 visas for niche professional roles such as yoga instructors and classical musicians, and the agreement falls short of making commitments on broader visa categories such as business visitors or IT professionals. This was something India had been keen on. On the other hand, while India has opened about 90% of its tariff lines for duty-free import from the U.K., it has kept key agricultural products such as dairy products, apples, oats, and edible oils out of the deal - key demands of the U.K. Similarly, while India has committed to reducing duties on automobile imports by a substantial 100 percentage points over time, these are subject to a graded quota over the next decade, which gives the domestic industry time to adjust. A sign of a good deal is when both sides walk away happy but not satisfied. In any case, such bilateral deals should not be viewed as a zero-sum game where one side's loss is another's gain. Enhancing bilateral trade is in both countries' interests, especially at a time when the world's biggest trading powers are raising tariff and non-tariff barriers.

The U.K. is a relatively small trading partner for India, but therein lies ample scope for growth. While at a macro scale the gains might initially be limited, the sector-wise increases have the potential to be significant. Sectors such as agriculture, textiles, leather and chemicals are all set to see quick gains. There is potential for longer term benefits too. The U.K. is a major gateway to Europe, which is a much bigger trading partner of India's. Goods destined for Europe could be routed through the U.K., and the duty-free arrangement will likely enhance this flow. Companies in other countries that already export to the U.K. will also start viewing India more favourably as an investment destination so as to take advantage of the duty-free access. It is now up to the government to help Indian exporters scale up and compete internationally. Another important consideration is that such a deal sets the template for future ones. The general trend is that the bigger the economy being negotiated with, the bigger the concessions given. The United States and the European Union will now want more from India than what it has conceded to the U.K

7. [True/False - Multi-Statement Evaluation]

I. India granted full duty-free access for apples and dairy products to the U.K.

II. The automobile tariff reductions by India are immediate and unlimited.
