SHALL WE READ?

Prime Minister Narendra Modi highlighted India's stance on the evolving Artificial Intelligence (AI) landscape at the AI Action Summit in Paris on February 11, stressing the need for "governance and standards that uphold our shared values, address risks, and build trust". This perspective is also reflected in the joint statement signed by India and over 50 other countries. Commitments to trust, safety, and universal access align well with India's efforts to advance AI technologies while mitigating risks. The nation's approach to AI will be crucial as the technology progresses and costs decline. Innovations such as Chinese firm DeepSeek's breakthrough reasoning models underscore the growing risks to labour markets. The IT and services sector constitutes a significant portion of India's economy but employs a relatively smaller workforce. AI-driven efficiency gains present an attractive business proposition, yet the potential for job losses or stagnant wage growth in this sector poses serious risks. The Prime Minister rightly pointed out that technological advancements historically create new employment opportunities. However, as noted in the Economic Survey, there is a valid concern regarding an Engels' pause, a phase where firms reap the benefits of new technology while real wages stagnate. India cannot afford even a brief period of such economic strain, making proactive policy responses essential.

xxx

The summit's emphasis on sustainable AI growth and energy efficiency is equally timely, given global climate imperatives. The United States produces more than twice the electricity of India, despite having just a quarter of its population. A growing share of this energy is now consumed by data centres, which power AI training and deployment. As AI-driven energy demand surges, ensuring that this growth is powered by renewable sources is critical. Commercial AI success remains elusive, with substantial investments flowing into top market players but offering limited financial returns. While India may not replicate this high-investment, low-return model, developing foundational AI models that are tailored to Indian needs is imperative. Leveraging emerging efficiencies and maximising AI's potential must remain central to India's strategy. The IndiaAI Mission's initiatives, such as subsidised access to Graphics Processing Unit (GPU) clusters and funding for promising projects, are encouraging steps toward this goal. Looking ahead, integrating AI education and skills training at scale will be essential. Even if a significant share of top AI talent moves abroad, India must ensure that its domestic industry retains sufficient expertise to remain competitive. AI will undoubtedly reshape industries, and preparing a robust talent pipeline will be key to ensuring that India not only adapts but also thrives in this transformation.

1. In his address at the AI Action Summit in Paris, Prime Minister Modi stressed the need for “governance and standards that uphold our shared values, address risks, and build trust.” Which of the following is most directly implied by this emphasis?

- a) Deregulating the AI sector to spur rapid innovation
- b) Harmonizing international AI frameworks to mitigate risks and ensure ethical development
- c) Prioritizing commercial competitiveness over societal values
- d) Restricting AI research to a select group of technologically advanced nations
- e) Removing all regulatory oversight to attract foreign investments

2. The passage references an “Engels’ pause” in the context of AI’s impact on the labor market. Which option best captures the concept of “Engels’ pause” as discussed?

- a) A temporary surge in employment due to rapid technology adoption
- b) A cyclical downturn in employment unrelated to technological progress
- c) An immediate and dramatic rise in wage growth following innovation
- d) A period during which technological benefits accrue to firms while real wages remain stagnant
- e) A policy-imposed freeze on labor market reforms during technological transitions

3. What potential risk does the passage associate with AI-driven efficiency gains in India's IT and services sector?

- a) A rapid increase in consumer spending
- b) An upsurge in domestic manufacturing jobs
- c) Job losses or stagnant wage growth
- d) A decline in global competitiveness
- e) Excessive foreign direct investment

4. In the context of AI and energy, what does the passage imply is critical for sustainable growth?

- a) Increasing fossil fuel consumption
- b) Reducing data centre capacities
- c) Powering AI-driven energy demand with renewable sources ✓
- d) Building new coal-fired power plants
- e) Shifting focus from energy efficiency to higher investments

5. The passage mentions concerns regarding an “Engels’ pause.” What can be inferred about the policy response India needs to adopt?

- a) Rely solely on market forces to adjust to technological changes
- b) Focus only on expanding AI research without addressing workforce issues
- c) Encourage mass recruitment in the IT sector without further training
- d) Implement proactive policies, including building a robust talent pipeline and mitigating wage stagnation
- e) Rely on international partnerships to solve domestic employment challenges
