SHALL WE READ?

Official estimates suggest that around 45 crore visitors, nearly a third of India's population, have already been to Prayagraj for the Maha Kumbh Mela, which began in mid-January. With such a massive influx, even a small percentage of individuals who carry microbes could trigger extensive chains of disease transmission. The Ganga at Prayagraj, where devotees not only have ritual baths but also drink the water, inevitably becomes a complex receptacle of microbiomes. The Central Pollution Control Board (CPCB), which is responsible for monitoring and controlling air, water and land pollution, has been assessing water quality at Prayagraj since the festival began. Its reports, which are publicly accessible, present a mixed picture.

On January 14, which was Makar Sankranti, one of the most auspicious bathing days, faecal coliform levels, a key indicator of contamination from human and animal waste, were at a high — nearly 11,000 units at the Sangam Ghat, which is more than four times the permissible limit of 2,500 units. At the Old Naini Bridge Ghat, along the Yamuna, the count was even higher, at 33,000 units. However, on other days, these numbers dropped to as low as 200 and 780 units.

xxx

Similar fluctuations were observed for other parameters of water quality such as biochemical oxygen demand (BOD) and dissolved oxygen (DO). A CPCB report submitted to the National Green Tribunal on February 3 stated that the water quality on January 12-13, 2025 was not fit for bathing, let alone drinking, despite bathing having a higher tolerance limit. However, the report also noted a reduction in organic pollution due to freshwater intrusion upstream. It further observed that the sheer number of people bathing in the river during the Maha Kumbh Mela, particularly on auspicious days, led to an inevitable spike in faecal contamination.

These fluctuations are not exclusive to the Kumbh Mela. Routine monitoring of water quality by the CPCB has consistently recorded similar patterns, reinforcing the fact that, regardless of what the festival may be, water in the Ganga at Prayagraj is not fit for consumption, whether as a few drops or bucketful. The river's suitability for bathing fluctuates based on water flow and dilution. Considering these adverse findings, Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath's dismissal of this scientific data as "baseless" is misleading. The National Mission for Clean Ganga is based on a sustained effort to restore the river's health, and Uttar Pradesh, its largest beneficiary, must prioritise continuous cleanup efforts instead of undermining legitimate pollution concerns. The Kumbh Mela highlights the urgent need for long-term solutions, not denialism. Science can come to the aid of the faithful; it is in no one's interest to undermine scientific findings in the name of encouraging a spiritual journey.

Q1. What does the article primarily discuss?

A) The religious significance of the Maha Kumbh Mela

B) The economic benefits of the Maha Kumbh Mela

C) The environmental impact of the Maha Kumbh Mela, especially water pollution

D) The cultural traditions of the Maha Kumbh Mela

E) The administrative challenges of organizing the Maha Kumbh Mela

Q2. Why does the article describe Uttar Pradesh CM Yogi Adityanath's dismissal of CPCB's data as misleading?

- A) The data presented by CPCB is inaccurate
- B) Scientific findings indicate genuine pollution concerns
- C) The CPCB is politically motivated against the government
- D) The river has already been cleaned completely
- E) The Maha Kumbh Mela is not responsible for pollution

Q3. Which logical inference can be drawn from the article regarding the Ganga's water quality?

- A) It is only polluted during religious festivals
- B) It fluctuates but is generally unfit for consumption
- C) It has no impact on public health
- D) The government has completely ignored the issue
- E) It is clean except for minor impurities

Q4. Which long-term approach does the article suggest to address the issue?

A) Banning all religious activities at the Ganga

B) Increasing the number of bathing ghats to reduce pollution

C) Denying pollution concerns to maintain faith among devotees

D) Implementing sustained cleanup efforts under the National Mission for Clean Ganga

E) Relying on natural dilution of pollutants without intervention

Q5. What does the article imply about the relationship between faith and science?

- A) Faith should completely disregard scientific findings
- B) Science can support religious practices through environmental efforts
- C) Scientific findings contradict religious beliefs entirely
- D) Pollution is a necessary part of religious rituals
- E) The government should not allow scientific studies on religious sites
